Some Suggestions For The Staff Rep

1. People need to talk
  - unemployed are not able to open up.
2. All will not be negative
  - some will see this loss as "I didn't like the job anyway" or as an opportunity to do something else.
3. Don't be surprised by reactions
  - some will be impervious to pain
  - what is normal?
4. Expect that grieving will have already begun
  - some are suspicious of layoffs coming
  - term teachers see the "writing on the wall"
  - you may see new alignments in staff rooms of the "out" group and the in group
  - give them information about the district track record in recall.
5. Other staff
  - don't know what to say (easier to avoid the subject)
  - patterns of relationships can be strained
  - others will see themselves as "survivors" guilt on the part of those who keep their positions.
6. Experienced teachers will be more difficult
  - shock
  - job market has changed
  - they haven't looked for a job for a long time
  - they need job search skills—help with resumes
7. Family reactions
  - ask how it is going with their spouse, their kids, etc.
  - remind them of the employee assistance plan
  - if their marital relationship is not strong, this may bring cracks in the marriage, etc.
8. Jobs provide four basic needs
  - community (relationships)
  - meaning of life (identity)
  - structure (work routine)
  - security.
9. Talk with them—support them
  - help them understand their options.

Some Suggestions for Reflective Listening

There are four kinds of reflection:

- A. PARAPHRASING
A paraphrase is a concise response to the speaker which states the essence of the other's content in the listener's own words.

Be concise:
  - reflect only the essentials
  - focus on the content
  - use the listener's own words
- B. REFLECTING FEELINGS
Mirroring back to the speaker, the emotions being communicated.

In order to reflect feelings successfully, focus on:
  - the feeling words used
  - the general content of the message
  - the speaker's body language
  - your intuitive voice—"If that were me, what would I be feeling"
- C. REFLECTING MEANINGS—EMPATHIC RESPONSE
When emotions and content are joined in one succinct response
  - we have a reflection of meaning.

Formula Response
So you feel	because
Natural Responses
You are	by since about that when
So when	you felt

Examples:

You are confused by this staff bulletin. You're angry about the change in plans. So when I asked you to complete the report by Friday, you felt resentful.

- D. SUMMATIVE REFLECTIONS
A brief restatement of the main themes and feelings the speaker expressed during the conversation.

Purpose

- To give the speaker a feeling of movement in exploring feelings and content
- To check for accuracy
- "Let's recap the ground we've covered so far..."
- "As I've been listening to you, your main concern seems to be .."
